Essay on a Scene before the Examination Hall

Boys and girls gather before the examination hall just half an hour before the starting of examination. Rickshaws after rickshaws and tongas after tongas leave the boys and girls there. Many come on their bicycles. In no time there is a large gathering

Boys and girls stand here and there. Some move about talking with one another. They will feel sad when the doors of the hall will be opened. Their parents encourage them. They tell them how they should write their answers to questions. Their friends advise them. They tell them their own experiences. They also tell them some examination tips.

Students think about the nature of the questions. They form small groups. These groups are on the benches, in the verandah or on the green ground. They guess the question papers. They answer them among themselves. A few boys and girls are seen alone. All are in a hurry to meet their friends. As soon as they meet some intelligent boy they surround him and ask him.

There are some candidates who have no fear of examination. They are free from care and anxiety. For them, examination is not more than a play. They are making fun as usual,

Just a few minutes before the beginning of the examination the peon opens the doors of the examination hall. Now the candidates enter in. All of them are in a great hurry.
