Essay on a Visit to Supermarket 200 to 250 words

Super bazaars have been opened in various cities by the Indian Government. The Government has risen to the occasion and it is hoped that such Bazaars will lend a helping hand in keeping the prices under control.

Last week, I had a chance of going to Super Bazaar for shopping. It is situated at Cannought Place in New Delhi. I was very surprised to see its huge building. My father also accompanied me. We parked our car in the parking and entered the Super Bazaar.

It was divided into various sections. Every section dealt with one type of article. There were sections of toilet goods, general merchandise, toys, books, clothes, domestic goods, cutlery, steel, and brassware, etc. The prices of all goods were properly marked.

We went to the vegetables and fruit section. There was a great rush of people who were buying vegetables and fruit. There was no need of higgling and haggling. We bought one kg. cauliflower for four rupees.

Then we went to the section dealing with clothes. My sister-in-law bought a saree worth two hundred fifty rupees. She was given a rebate at the rate of 10 percent. My brother bought a piece of cloth for my shirt. I was very pleased.

I left two-place unwillingly and returned home in the evening.
