Introduction

One in three Nigerians has plans to move out of the country. The reason is not far off. The song on everyone's lips is "the insecurity of their lives and property, the deteriorating economy, corruption and terrorism."

National insecurity increases with each passing day. The state of national unrest will turn entirely into a bloodbath if no significant action is taken. The chaos created by apostates is deadly everywhere in the world.

Insecurity in Nigeria is based on corruption and corruption in all sectors. About 98 million Nigerians live in extreme poverty making the country the world's poorest capital; in this figure, many young people and children; these age groups are directly linked to terrorism and act as significant agents and agents of chaos. Nigeria is now in a state of lawlessness. This is due to the weakness of the justice system.

Extraordinary leaders have significantly contributed to the increase in social ills in the nation. The insecurity of lives and structures is a joint statement made by the average Nigerian. Boko Haram insurgents in Northern Nigeria have killed many orphans, widows, and widowers through bombings and killings.

Many northerners have fled their homes to seek refuge in IDP camps and neighboring countries. In recent weeks, it has been reported that some youths in the Sokoto region refused to listen to their Governor's request to return home while enjoying peace of mind outside the Niger Republic.

Kidnapping, a thriving new business nation, has bound the interests of many - as elites and ordinary people are kidnapped for ransom. Recently, students have suffered greatly from this hardship. Schools are now dangerous for students in Katsina, Kaduna, Zamfara, and many other Northern provinces.

The hopes of many of the captives in this spectacle remain unsettled. Fearing the abduction of their children, parents now love their wards at home rather than at school.

In extreme cases, a person often gets into a fight. Now sects sprout in every corner of the globe to protect themselves and their loved ones. Illegal weapons are now commonplace.

Missing bullets have claimed the lives of many promising young people. Shepherds are giving a wrong assignment, too. Many farmers have fled their farms to protect their lives from deadly herders.

How long these will remain is what no one could have predicted. Hopefully, soon. Nigeria will be relieved of its insecurities and will rejoice in the liberation of Boko Haram, Gangsters, Livestock Killers, and other rebel groups who have been teasing her.
