

Expository Essay on True Friendship

Friendship is a relationship that has many dimensions, directions, ways, forms and styles. It is not just a relationship between two people. Still, it is a connection between two hearts. Friendships can be between two or more people, and there is no obligation on age, gender, location, race, religion or nationality. People who live in a house or live anywhere in this world are equally prone to a friendly relationship. Friendships have no boundaries and no boundaries.

In life, everyone will meet many people who claim to be your friends, but you will make a few real ones. What is a friend? In the dictionary, a friend is defined as someone who is not hateful or attached to another in love or respect, a beloved friend. In my opinion, a friend is more than that.

A friend is someone who will stand up for you, even in the worst of times. Friendship is about believing in your friends and helping them achieve all they can or want to do in life.

We deal with hugs, advice, kind words, fights, and anger, whatever comes our way, and still friends with each other no matter what happens.

We all have a desire to make friends. That's what makes us get out of our shells and get a chance to get hurt. It is not easy to know who is a friend and who is not.

I believe Divya is a true friend. We met at school and have known each other for five years. Divya and I have gone through many good and bad times together.

In addition, we have experienced many things together, such as visiting Goa and South India, where we have shared many exciting times. Our friendships do nothing but grow over the years and continue to grow. We are currently enjoying another trip by staying together in Pune.

I consider Divya to be a true friend. A true friend is there when you need him. To have. A true friend is an incredible thing. Find someone who shares your values and cares about who you are and what you do. A true friend is there when you need him.

He is a man who is not ashamed to cry in front of him, who can tell him deep and dark secrets, knowing that they will be safe. The adage that a true friend is someone you can call on for months or even years has gone by as if the day had not passed.

Divya and I have been through this, we broke up for a year and a half while she was away from her exams, and I was back home in Delhi to spend time with my mom. Once again, we both met to go to university, and it was as if we had never escaped.

True friendships rarely come, so thank you for meeting him. We must go through anything that threatens our company and see the big picture. Without our friends, we are truly lost.

We must always keep our true friends close to our hearts no matter what happens. You go and tell your friends how important they are to you in their lives. Do not let them slip away. If they do, get out and put them back. The commitments we make during these days will help us continue in the months and years to come.
