Unemployment is a significant problem in India and the rest of the world. Thousands of people are unemployed. Apart from that, unemployment issues are even worse in India due to population growth and the demand for jobs. Moreover, if we ignore this issue, it will be the cause of the nation's demise.

What Is Unemployment?

Unemployment means a situation where skilled and competent people want to do work. But you cannot get an excellent job for several reasons.

Types of Unemployment

We know what unemployment is, but unemployment does not just mean that a person is unemployed. Likewise, unemployment includes people working in areas without their expertise.

Different types of unemployment include hidden unemployment, seasonal unemployment, lack of open jobs, unemployment in technology, structural malfunction. In addition, other unemployment rates are cyclical unemployment, educated unemployment, unemployment, disputed unemployment, chronic unemployment, and short-term unemployment.

Above all, seasonal unemployment, unemployment, and hidden unemployment are India's most common unemployment problems.

Reasons for Unemployment

In a country like India, there is a good reason why the vast majority of the population is unemployed. Some of these factors are population growth, slower economic growth, seasonal work, slower economic growth, and the collapse of the small industry.

In addition, these are a significant cause of unemployment in India. Also, the situation has become so tricky that highly educated people are ready to do sweeping work.

Despite all this, most people are involved in the agricultural sector, and this sector provides employment only during harvest or planting season.

In addition, the biggest reason for unemployment in India is the large number of people who need a large number of jobs every year that the government and authorities can provide.

Consequences of Unemployment

If things continue as they are now, unemployment will be a big problem. Apart from this, the following things happen in the economy: growing poverty, increasing crime, exploitation of workers, political instability, mental health, and loss of skills. As a result, all of this will eventually lead to the nation's demise.

Government action

The government has taken this issue seriously and has gradually reduced unemployment. Some of these programs include IRDP (Integrated Rural Development Program), DPAP (Drought Area Program), Jawahar Rozgar Yojana, Employment Assurance Scheme, NRY (Nehru Rozgar Yojana), Self-Employment Training, PMIUPEP (Integrated Urban Poverty of the Prime Minister's Program), job exchanges, Employment Guarantee Program, formal industry development, small and medium enterprises, employment in developed countries, and Jawahar Gram Samridhi Yojana and a few others.

In addition, these government programs also provide flexibility to create jobs in the private sector.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, we can say that the problem of unemployment in India has reached a critical stage. However, now the government and local authorities have taken this issue seriously and are working to reduce unemployment. Also, to fully resolve the issue of unemployment, we must address the massive problem of unemployment which is a large number of the Indian population.
