Introduction

Child abuse is a term you may hear in the news or movies. It refers to crime where children are forced to work at a very young age. It is like expecting children to take on responsibilities such as working and caring for themselves. Working children are subject to specific policies that place limitations and restrictions.

The average age for a child to work is fifteen years and older. Children under this age limit will not be permitted to indulge in any form of forced labour. Why is that? Because child labor deprives children of the opportunity to grow up to be responsible adults. In some lands, it is illegal, but it is far from complete.

Causes of Child Labour

Child labor occurs for many reasons. While some reasons may be expected in some lands, specific reasons for certain areas and regions. If we look at what causes child abuse, we will fight it better.

To begin with, it occurs in countries where poverty and unemployment are high. When families do not have enough income, they put their children to work to have enough money to live on. Similarly, if local elders are unemployed, young ones should work in their areas.

In addition, if people do not get an education, they will eventually use their children. The uneducated are concerned about the short-term effect, which is why they are putting children to work for a living.

In addition, the cost-effective attitude of various industries is a significant factor in child labor. They hire children because they pay less for the same job as adults. Since children work harder than adults and have lower-incomes, they love children. They can easily influence and control themselves. They see their profit only, so they use children in factories.

Termination of Child Labor

We must develop effective methods to end child labor to save our children. It will also improve the future of any country facing these social issues. First of all, one can form many unions that work only to prevent child labor. It should help children who enjoy this work and punish those who do it.

Furthermore, we must keep parents aware of instilling in them the importance of education. If we make education accessible and people know, we will teach more children who will not produce children. In addition, public awareness of the harmful effects of child labor is essential.

In addition, family control measures should be taken. This will reduce the family burden, so parents will be enough to work for them instead of children when you have tiny mouths to feed. Every family should be given a small amount of money from the government to survive.

In short, the government and the people must come together. Employment opportunities must be given to the masses to earn a living instead of using their children. Children are our country's future; we cannot expect them to retain their families' economic standing rather than have a normal childhood.
